Essay Writing

The Introductory Paragraph

The introduction prepares the reader for what the rest of the essay will be about. It should both inform and capture his or her interest.

Parts of an Introductory Paragraph:

- A hook:

An interesting fact, controversial statement, or question that is intended to draw the reader's attention to the essay and pique their interest.

- A general topic sentence:

This sentence simply states what topic will be covered over the course of the essay. It does not provide any clues or directly state the details, but simply serves as a transition to the writer's thesis.

- The thesis statement:

The thesis statement is one sentence usually found in the introductory paragraph that directly states the writer's claim or belief about a particular topic. Where the topic sentence tells you the general subject of the conversation, the thesis statement informs the reader what particular direction the conversation will take with regards to that given topic. It may also hint at which details will be covered or directly name them as well.
