CASE STUDY
MDT AutoSave Increases Productivity and Reduces Downtime and Safety Risks for Nestlé Purina

With AutoSave Change Management Software, a Nestlé Purina plant was able to replace their manual version control process with an automated solution that documents and saves the program version made by multiple programmers so that no program is lost while verifying the correct program is running, reducing risk of downtime and errors.

The Challenge
The plant was using a time-consuming manual version control process that did not provide enough documentation, making it difficult to verify the correct program.

The Solution
The Nestlé Purina plant installed MDT AutoSave to manage the entire life cycle of the programming, including version control, documentation, and safety verification.

The Result
The plant was able to reduce downtime and safety risks, and increase productivity. The plant also reduced the risk of program loss and improved the overall quality of the program.

The Background & Manual Process to Managing Changes
As automation devices have grown more complex and have incorporated more plant data in their operation, there is an increased need for programming changes to reduce overall operation or improve performance. In environments requiring frequent changes, it is not uncommon for code to be lost or change overwritten, resulting in increased downtime and decreased productivity.

Before MDT AutoSave was installed at the Nestlé Purina plant in Wheeling, Pennsylvania, the plant used a "home-grown" program to track changes in their programmable devices. Approximately 10 programmers would make changes by updating the manual device program. Each programmer would change and then using the one version of the program held in memory.
