Lesson 10
The Beginning Is Everything

Objectives

- To make a personal connection to the novel
- To detail a fictional and nonfictional experience

Notes to the Teacher

In this lesson, students make a further connection with the novel. This lesson focuses on students' own neighborhoods and the people in them. Because Sandra Cisneros's entire use of narrative for neighborhood for the reader, students will also receive their own neighborhoods. It is with this lesson that students complete the novel. Students will read through the final four chapters of the book. They work with the final chapters will focus on the skills they have learned, practiced, and honed throughout this unit. Some of these areas are: analysis, detail, opinion, evidence, paraphrase, point of view, tone, and repetition. Students will answer questions about their reading ranging from simple recall to analysis and interpretation. The final chapters are modeled and compared to Cisneros's earlier work in "The Three Sisters," the reader notes some similarities to the community. These two women deal with unexpected events, such as death and writing, and bring to Cisneros the first knowledge of her desire to leave Mango Street. It is in this chapter that Esperanza first sees that though she is a part of who she is, she is not a part of herself that she desires to distance. In "Hacks and I Talking on Edna's Steps," the thought that Esperanza in Mango Street are again about her to her, but this time in an entirely different person. And again, Esperanza distances the thought with her desire to leave. Perhaps the shortest chapter, "A House of My Own," really sets up the way to transcend the reader. Here the reader sees that Esperanza's desire to leave Mango Street is not arriving somewhere else. The final chapter, "Mango Says Goodbye Sometimes" is a perfect way to end the novel. In this reading, readers see Esperanza leaving her home in her mind. The reader experiences her realization that she will never leave her home on the day when she has gone away from the Mango Street to begin her life anew.

When students are asked to reflect upon their neighborhood, it is possible that students may have the desire to focus on a neighborhood that they do not currently live in, but lived in at one earlier time to their lives. This works just as well. The real purpose of this lesson is to see how to make a connection with the text and to grow because of their experience with it.

Procedure

1. Distribute Readers 22. Students should have finished reading the novel. Students to complete the handout asking them to record the tone, mood, metaphors, similes, and details or descriptions used in each chapter. Reviewing these skills and practicing them with the reading will further hone the student's reading comprehension and style analysis. This task can be completed in a variety of ways as well as individually, in pairs, or in small groups. The reader class could complete the handout in a large group discussion or through a round robin type discussion.

Sandra Cisneros essay my name

Mornings I still reach for you before opening my eyes.

An antique habit from last summer when we pulled each other into the heat of groin and belly, slept with an arm around the other.

The Texas sun was like that.
Like a body asleep beside you.

But when I open my eyes
to the flannel and down, mist at the window and blue light from the bay, I remember where I am.

This weight on the other side of the bed is only books, not you. What I said I loved more than you.
True.

Though these mornings
I wish books loved back.
